Hello, I am Ibnu from Indonesia. A Ph.D. student in the Meteorological Laboratory, Faculty of Science and Technology at Hirosaki University, Japan. My research deals with the future impact of global warming on Indonesian climate. During my research, I get a lot of opportunities and full support from the university to participate in research campaign, international workshops/seminars relating to my research. My supervisor and other lecturers are very kind and always support the students thereby creating comfortable research environment. Language barrier is not a problem, since there are many friendly university teaching staff who are always ready to helping me, especially; regarding administrative affairs. Hirosaki city is beautiful with lots of sightseeing places, which is serene, unlike the situation of bigger cities in Japan. Indigenous people are so friendly, which makes this city an ideal place not only for study but also for relaxation during weekend. My best time is when the spring comes, when I can enjoy the cherry blossoms from my lab's window while busy battling with my research. I shall miss this moment so much
